

what a good day to be thankful for all we have. i know everyone will be busy with various activities, and perhaps this email won't even be read today. whenever it might be viewed, know that you were all in my prayers this day. prayers that God would bless each of you in a special way. i will try to keep this short.

we often complain about things that don't really matter in the scheme of things. one just has to look around at others in the world who not only have much less, but are suffering persecution; often for their faith, but often just because of the evil that permeates this world. remember the famous quote, "i cried because i had no shoes until i saw a man who had no feet".

long ago, before i was even married (and i got married at sixteen), i remember telling someone that God and the people you love are all that really matters; in that order. now at age seventy four, it remains as true now than it was then. of course, being in Christ Jesus, we know we are obliged to love all others, even as our selves. "for if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans (evil ones) the same?" matt 5:46

i beseech you, give the love which we all have received from Him. love does not run out. it's well is always full. it replenishes even as we draw from it. how? because He is that well! God bless all!
