

jan 21

i don't feel anything particular from the Lord today, so i will not bore you with my own musings. i will instead, take a brief moment to encourage anyone who might be needing it.

friends, we are one day closer to the coming of our Lord and our gathering together with Him. tomorrow will grant us one less day, and on and on. but we know that day will come. i believe it with all my heart.

i must say, i am constantly amazed when i hear a person who believes in no absolutes talk about a recently deceased person (like betty white). i hear them say, "well at least they will be with so and so again". they like to express the sentiment there will at least be a peaceful resting and joining with lost loved ones.

there will be nothing good or peaceful without Jesus. "there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth." matt 13:42 only those who have "passed from death into life" (john 5:24) will know that good and peaceful and so much more.

so i leave you with this blessed word from our His promises: "eye has not seen, nor ear heard, nor have entered into the heart of man the things which God has prepared for those who love Him." 1 cor 2:9

hold that joy before you even as our Lord held that joy before Him. it gave Him strength to endure it all. our Lord is coming for us.

linda